

Name: Monica Haage

Monica Haage is a safety culture specialist at IAEA. Her area of expertise is also covering Human and Organizational Factors, Leadership and Management for Safety and the systemic perspective of the interaction between Individuals, Technology and Organization. She is the scientific secretary for several new IAEA publications on safety culture and also in charge of the new safety culture assessment methodology.

Ms Haage has a degree in both Engineering and Social Psychology. Before she joined IAEA she worked as international EHS manager at ISS; was a safety culture specialist at Oskarshamn Nuclear Power Plant; was responsible for the education on organizational theory at Skovde University, and held various positions at Scandinavian Airlines.

Personal definition of safety culture:

Shared understandings between individuals, groups, organizations on how all performed activities enables safety magnitudes.